Joe Bodine, CEO of ABMI Mergers & Acquisitions Inc. (ABMI), tells us how the final quarter of 2014 panned out for his firm.

Business brokers across the US are independent agents who sell small businesses valued up to US$15m. A typical business broker works with five to ten sellers at a time.

Unfortunately, this industry has a horrible reputation for costing small business owners many millions because of their lack of expertise.

It's hard to believe, the entire industry is made up of unregulated "cowboy" and "lone ranger" independent business brokers. After 20 years of being caught in this broken industry, Joe Bodine, the CEO of ABMI Mergers & Acquisitions, made the daring and long overdue decision to fix the process.

"Imagine when you sell... a team of six well-seasoned professionals, who have spent their entire lives running accounting firms, working as lawyers, buying and selling businesses and running companies of all types, show up at your door and offer to help?" says Bodine.

"They use their combined lifetimes of experience as they evaluate, price, package, market, interview buyers, arranging financing and finally close the transaction. The ABMI team understands you spent your lifetime of blood sweat and tears building this company that's become a direct reflection of who you are."

ABMI's Q4, says Bodine, was the best he had seen in over a decade. "As we contemplate this article, we are actively managing seven transactions across multiple industries and have other deals on the brink of selling. I attribute this to the favourable market conditions discussed earlier and the way we are serving our clients."

And things are looking good for 2015, he says. "Given the continued exodus of retiring baby boomers, we expect to build up to the best 10 years the brokerage industry has ever experienced."
